

BUSTA 1

People flying in the United States do not have to take off their shoes at the airport anymore. This new rule started on Tuesday.

The old rule for people to take off their shoes began about 20 years ago. It started after a man put a bomb in his shoe and went on an airplane in 2001.

Now, new technology will make security checks faster. People will not wait so long.

Sometimes, officers might ask some people to take off their shoes. This is only if they need to check more.

Other rules are the same. You still need to show your ID. Your bags will still go through a scanner.

The TSA PreCheck program will still be there. You pay money for this program. Then, you do not have to take off your shoes, belt or jacket. You can also keep your laptop in your bag.

The TSA helps make flying safe. It started in 2001. They are looking for new ways to make travel safer.

BUSTA 3

Australia will have a new law. The law says workers don't have to answer their phone or emails after work.

The rule is called "right to disconnect". It will help workers have a good work-life balance. France and Spain have this rule, too.

If a company doesn't follow this rule, the company has to pay a fine.

Some workers work extra hours but do not get paid. This rule will stop that. The prime minister of Australia, Anthony Albanese, supports the new rule.

Some people do not like the new rule. They think it will be bad for businesses. They also think it will be bad for people who like flexible working time.

Every year, Australians work about six extra weeks without pay. Companies save about A$92 billion ($60.13 billion) every year because of the extra work.